IDEAL CANDIDATES

Successful interns are self-starters who can fearlessly delve into new terrain. Candidates should be good thinkers and organized project managers. Strong written and verbal skills are also needed. Internships are usually de-centralized or virtual (i.e. outside an office). They can be project based or part-time, requiring a minimum commitment. These are real world, practical learning opportunities helping organizations to improve. Modest stipend offered; promising interns are offered consulting opportunities, as they arise.
